At the end of three weeks the money was returned to her and the invitation extended to vacate the apartment. The superintendent declared to day that Miss Kimball's neighbors was simple folk who new and then desired to sleep o' nights.

The young woman and her guests, however, put slumber out of the question in her vicinity. All night long corks popped and boys tolled up the stairs carrying baskets of champagne. Unsteady but full-voiced college songs with the night of the grant of the windows of the young lady's apartment.

Elizably the neighbors rose in a body.

Finally the neighbors rose in a body and demanded that the dashing young grant move. The superintendent called upon her, but found a hospital nurse in attendance, who had been suddenly called in to repair shattered nerves. When the nurse left the month's rent was returned to Miss Rimball with the request that she leave instantly. She demurred for several days, but finally left on Wednesday last.
